LXP Announces Two Additions, One Promotion in Preparation for Phase II Lane Implementation for McDonald's Managed Freight Initiative

PITTSBURGH – Leveraged Execution Providers (LXP) today announced the additions of Tim Mattock and Charlie McFeaters as transportation service coordinators. The company also announced the promotion of Candice Kobetich to service recovery specialist. The moves will enhance LXP capabilities in targeted areas as the company proceeds with Phase II implementation of the McDonald's Freight Optimization Initiative.

Mattock joins LXP from Knight Transportation, where he was a transportation analyst. He earned a bachelor's degree in supply chain & information systems at Penn State University. McFeaters comes to LXP from Sony Corporation, where he served as a load control center coordinator. He holds a bachelor's degree in business management from the University of Pittsburgh. As transportation service coordinators, they are responsible for ensuring that carriers are performing to service and capacity expectations.

In her new position as service recovery specialist, Kobetich is responsible for handling operational issues that require extra attention and follow-up, as well as for ensuring top-quality customer service responsiveness to all McDonald's network stakeholders.

"These additions will help ensure that we maintain a high level of performance throughout the McDonald's system as we proceed with Phase II lane implementation for the McDonald's Managed Freight Initiative," commented Paul Newbourne, vice president and general manager of LXP.

As the foundation for the McDonald's Freight Optimization Initiative, LXP serves as the network manager for the McDonald's USA managed transportation initiative. The company is responsible for planning a wide-ranging program designed to centralize and optimize the management of McDonald's domestic freight.

Based in Pittsburgh, Leveraged Execution Providers is a wholly owned subsidiary of Armada Supply Chain Solutions. LXP develops, implements and manages customized supply chain solutions that drive operating efficiencies for its customers.
